A 'Lightweight' Leader May Be What EU Powers Want

Chancellor Heimut Kohl of Germany on Monday formally summoned the other 11 heads of government to a summit meeting here Friday to anoint a candidate for the presidency of the European Commission. The move increased pressure on his colleagues to agree on a candidate and avoid a repeat of the embarrassing failure in Greece two weeks ago, when Prime Minister John Major of Britain vetoed Belgium's Jean-Luc Dehaene at the last minute.

The latest front-runner, EU sources said, was Prime Minister Jacques Santer of Luxembourg. He enjoys solid German and French backing.

But despite being regarded as an able man, he packs little clout as leader of the Union's smallest country. "Our feeling is he's a lightweight," a Belgian official said.

The other name most often mentioned, Poul Schluter, the former Danish prime minister, is skeptical of European integration. His country has opted out of the Union's common defense and justice policies.

Mr. Schluter, who resigned 18 months ago over an immigration scandal, is best known for his dismissive response in 1986 when asked if Denmark was giving up its sovereignty in signing the Single European Act, which paved the way for the 1992 single market. WASHINGTON - Robert M. Gates, the former CIA di-rector, said Monday he would not rule out the possibility that President Kim Il Sung of North Korea was killed by hard-liners wary of the tack he was taking with the United States and South Korea.

LITTLE ROCK, Arkansas - Twenty years ago, Susan Webber Wright studied navigation law under Professor Bill Clinton Now she is about to travel through scarcely charted legal waters as the federal judge pre-siding over a lawsuit that accesses President Clinton of improper sexual advances.

Life can be full of strange twists, especially in a state where it sometimes seems that: everyone has crossed paths with everyone cise. About the time she was in Mr. Clinton's classroom, she was also out on the campaign trail working against him, in the congressional race that he lost.

A conservative Republican, Judge Wright was appointed to the post on the U.S. District Court in 1990 by President George Bush, and she ruled in some important cases from Mr. Clinton's last years as governor, handing him a mixed bag of victories and defeats.

She is currently presiding over a Little Rock school desegregation case and ruled in 1991 that the court had no authority to extend district tax rates to carry out desegregation. She has upheld the Arkansas death penalty statute, which Governor Clinton supported, but ruled that Arkansas violated federal law when it cut reimbursement rates to Medicaid

Now, Judge Wright, 45, has been assigned to a case that brings a rare question of presidential immunity and much more publicity.

Paula Corbin Jones, and mer Arkansas state

Her lawsuit charged Mr. Clinton with vio-lating a federal civil rights law. Lawyers for Mr. Clinton argued last month that he should be given immunity from the civil suit while he is in office and that the lawsuit be put on hold until the immunity question was resolved.

The question of granting immunity for a sitting president from a civil suit involving actions alleged to have occurred before his taking office has arisen only once before, when President John F. Kennedy was sned in California for his indirect role in a traffic accident at the 1960 Democratic National Convention, in Los Angeles.

A California state judge ruled that Mr. Kennedy could be sued as any ordinary citizen could, but the opinion has no binding effect on the Jones case, Judge Wright has said she will rule before Aug. 10 whether to

Meanwhile, Executive Director Benjamin Chavis reiterated his plan to draw all elements of the black community together under the umbrella of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Mr. Chavis was criticized for inviting Louis Farrakhan, the Nation of Islam leader, to a black unity convention in Baltimore last month. Mr. Farrakhan was not invited to speak at the NAACP convention, which runs through Thursday in Chicago, his hometown.

"Disunity among African-American leaders and organizations has impeded our social progress," Mr. Chavis said in his keynote address to approximately 4,000 delegates. "We learn from all. No one of us knows all the

Mr. Chavis also suggested that the NAACP welcome Hispanics into the group, and he called on delegates to make the organization more appealing to young people and innerents.

This is no time for cynicism nor for disillusionment nor hopelessness," he said. "We are on the move and we are fired up." Membership, he said, increased in the past year from 490,000 to 675,000, and people under 24 make up 65 percent of the new

U.S. and France Settle AIDS Dispute

WASHINGTON — American health offi-cials acknowledged Monday that U.S. scientists used a French virus to develop an HIV test kit and agreed to give the Pasteur Insti-tute in Paris more of the royalties. The two governments have had a lingering dispute over how to divide the HIV test kit royalties, despite a 1987 settlement that was supposed to share them equally.

Instead, because more American than French test kits are sold each year, the United States has received $20 million in royalties to the Pasteur Institute's $14 million.

The new agreement, announced at a meeting of the French and American AIDS Foundation, is intended to equalize the royalties and "normalize the sometimes rocky rela-tions" between the two countries' health establishments, said Dr. Harold Varmus, director of the U.S. National Institutes of Health. The meeting was at the institute's headquarters in Bethesda, Maryland.

The agreement also included an acknowledgment by the NIH and its parent, the Department of Health and Human Services, that scientists at the NIH used a virus provided to them by [the Pasteur Institute] to invent the American HIV test kit," he said.

Each side will continue to keep the first 20 percent of royalties from sales of its kits. The rest will be pooled, with 50 percent going to the Pasteur Institute, 25 percent to the United States and 25 percent to the World AIDS Foundation. The old formula gave 25 percent to the World AIDS Foundation and 37.5 percent each to France and the United States.

Haiti Ousts In Household Homicides, Men Have Edge

- In another act of defiance toward the world community, Haiti's military-hacked rulers ordered international human rights monitors on Monday to leave the country within 48 hours.

The announcement, which came in a note from the Foreign Ministry, was immediately condemned by the United Nations and the Organization of American States, which ran a mission to monitor and document human rights abuses in Haiti.

The Haitian move also drew verbal fire from Washington. We certainly condemn the illegal de facto regime in Port-au-Prince for its intention to expel the UN-OAS human rights observers from Haiti," a State Department spokeswoman said at a news conference.

The spokeswoman said the decision by Haiti's military leaders was "certainly a serious escalation in the conflict between the regime and the international community." The joint mission began in 1992 as part of an aborted agreement to return Haiti's ousted president, Jean-Bertrand Aristide, to power. The military, led by Lieutenant General Raoul Cédras, overthrew Father Atistide in a military coup in September 1991. ds in Hairi ture people, they rape people," Mr. Caputo said of the Haitian military, "And they don't want any witnesses in their country." The mission wrote numerous reports documenting human rights abuses by the military and its civilian allies, accusing them of murder, torture and systematic, politically motivated rape.

While powerless to stop abuses, the mission had proved a thorn in the side of the military, issuing a steady stream of reports that strongly linked the military to abuses. The reports were widely viewed as credible by the international communi-

The outcomes of family murder cases were about the same as those in all types of murder cases. Defendants were about as likely to be charged with first-degree murder as all murder defendants, and were no more likely to be acquitted or have their cases dismissed.

Mothers were more likely to murder a son than a daughter; 64 percent of their victims were sons. Fathers, in contrast, were more likely to kill daughters, who made up 52 percent of the slain.

In murders of children under the age of 12, parents were the defendants in 57 percent of the cases. Nearly 80 percent of the children in these cases had been ahused by the parent who killed them.

in the House and Senate may succeed in their struggle to reverse the political tide, momentum now appears to be building toward a consensus that would drastically scale back the role of government originally pro-posed by Mr. Clinton.

The evolving legislation appears likely to rely primarily on private businesses — rather han government — to bring health-care costs under control. It probably will fall considera-bly short of Mr. Clinton's goal of making sure that all Americans who are now uninsured would be able to obtain coverage. And it would do little or nothing to distribute the healthcare burden more equitably by requiring employers to take part and by reducing rampant cost-shifting between groups of patients and providers.

This more modest approach, hich puts most of its faith in reforming the insurance market and giving government subsi-dies to those who cannot afford coverage, has a familiar ring.

"Now that we've been starkly confronted with a dramatically different vision that arguably goes much too far, the clear trade-offs are apparent and the more modest approach looks better," he added.

Two House committees and two Senate panels have approved their own versions of health-care reform. Although the bills still must clear the House and Senate floors, some outlines of what could be the ultimate legislation are coming into focus.

Already gone are Mr. Clinton's huge, government-orga-nized "alliances" through which most Americans would have bought their health coverage. Instead, the congressional committees have opted for voluntary cooperatives through which small businesses and individuals could pool their purchasing power. It is also fairly clear that government will not have as much power over health-care costs as Mr. Clinton had proposed. Most of the committees weakened his provision to impose caps on increases in health-in-surance premiums, and there will be intense pressure on the floors of the House and Senate to further dilute the provisions or discard them entirely. The most important question that remains is whether Mr. Clinton can hold to his goal of guaranteeing coverage for every American. House and Senate leaders insist they will present legislation that does that, but no one has come up with a po-

Russia Is the Key

Poland, like other countries in Eastern Europe, is unhappy that it is not being offered a firm timetable for full membership in NATO, Bill Clinton was reminded of that when he visited last week. The Partnership for Peace — established in NATO to allay the insecurity of Russia's neighbors while not antagonizing Russia — still leaves the East Europeans uneasy. But President Clinton was wise to defer his decision. To include countries such as Poland now invites the redrawing of lines in Europe and the start of a second cold war. The Partnership for Peace is two things: an effort to integrate Russia into the rest of Europe, not leave it out in the cold, by developing the rudiments of collective security; and a hedge against failure, and the revival of Russian imperialism, by preparing to expand the alliance eastward.

In its collective security aspect, it will involve all the partners in joint military planning and training for peacekeeping in the region. At least that will get all the region's armies in the habit of working with their neighbors. Partners like Poland can also prepare to become allies by family can also prepare to become allies by familiarizing themselves with the alliance's military requirements and ways of operating while remedying their own deficiencies. But closer partnership poses a contra-diction: to expand NATO would alienate

Russia. That contradiction will come into play well before full membership becomes an issue, as East Europeans look to the West instead of to Russia to supply new arms. Perhaps the Russian military could be induced to engage in joint plan-ning with the United States on common concerns like preventing nuclear and mis-sile proliferation. Perhaps conversion will find other work for Russian arms suppliers. But these steps are unlikely to dissolve the contradiction.

One way out is to focus on changing the military cultures of all these countries, as NATO once did in Germany and tries, as NATO once did in Germany and Spain. That means going beyond the formalities of military partnership to impart democratic values like acceptance of civilian control. It also means keeping officers occupied professionally and out of politics. But Americans sympathetic to Eastern Europe are resisting funding for common military undertakings with Russia and pushing for premature alliance.

Military cooperation is a key to transforming Russia, which will make all of Europe more secure. Bolder leadership Europe more secure. Bolder leadership in the White House and the U.S. Con-gress will be needed, both to accomplish that delicate mission and to sell it to Russia's nervous neighbors.

Betrayal in Nigeria

One year after Moshood Abiola apparently won Nigeria's democratic presidential election, only to watch as the military tial election, only to watch as the military annulled the results, he is now facing charges that could send him to jail for life. His offense? He has decided to assume the office that was freely and fairly conveyed to him by the people. Nigerian military leaders, having never seen an election or popular civilian leader in 33 years of independence that they could stomach for very long, call Mr. Abiola's decision an act of treason. It is they, however, who have betrayed their country. Each time a Nigerian military regime cuts down civilian rule, it is done with the cuts down civilian rule, it is done with the promise of giving the people a new, im-proved and less fractious transition to democracy. True to form, the current crop of generals has been following that tired old script to the letter since snuffing out the latest experiment with democracy.

Two military regimes and one civilian puppet government have governed the country since June 1993, each promising another journey to the ballot box one day soon. Instead, what the soldiers have done is to take the people's rights and civil liberties from them. Their chosen leader is being held incommunicado, a judge's order to produce him in court is being ignored, human rights leaders, journalists and former legislators have been arrested and hassled for political reasons.

and the elected National Assembly has been outlawed. Having the power, the military has made a colossal mess of things.

For all its wealth in oil, Nigeria is awash in red ink. Its creditors hold $33 billion in IOUs. Through gross mismanagement and corruption, the once agri-culturally rich country suffers from 50 percent unemployment and can no long-er feed itself. All the while, a man with no political base, General Sani Abacha, who has stood on the edges of power in recent years and who now openly parades as head of state, is taking a turn at enjoying the perquisites of power. He rides high now. But he will soon learn the lesson that other military strongmen have had to absorb, some the hard way: dissent cannot be crushed permanently. Nigeria's state of autocracy cannot survive.

But pro-democracy Nigerians should not have to march alone. During the recent White House Conference on Africa, Chinton administration officials went out of their way to commit themselves to stronger ties with Africa. The national security adviser, Anthony Lake, spoke of leaving no doubt in the minds of Africa's authoritarians that the United States insists on a rapid transition to democracy, a return to civilian rule and respect for human rights. That message must be forcefully registered in Nigeria.

Japan Has Cause to Worry About Chinese Ambition

TOKYO — China says it needs a peaceful environment to be strong and prosperous, yet Beijing seems to be pursuing contradictory policies. It wants to participate in multilateral economic and security arrangements in the Asia-Pacific region. At the same time, it is increasing its military power and trying to establish a militarily dominant position in Asia by taking advantage of the current situation when the United States and Russia have cut back their armed forces and defense budgets. One path is internationalist, the other nationalist.

China's self-confidence and assertive ness have increased in line with the rapid growth of its economy since market-oriented reforms were introduced in the late 1970s. Where is China heading? Will it become a hegemonic power, establishing a new regional order under its control by taking advantage of the upper hand it has over its neighbors in size and power? Despite the fact that China and Japan have close ties in virtually all fields, their relationship remains essentially fragile. China is concerned about the rise of Japan as a political power which is now Japan as a pointical power which is now sending its troops overseas as part of United Nations peacekeeping operations and seeking a permanent seat in the UN Security Council. Meanwhile, Japan is becoming apprehensive about China's military buildup, particularly the naval modernization, its continued supply of By Masashi Nishihara missiles to areas of potential conflict, and its testing of nuclear weapons. Beijing fears that if economic and trade tensions between Japan and the United States intensify, Tokyo may pursue a foreign and defense policy indepen-dent of Washington. China appears to consider Japan as a major source of consider Japan as a major source of threat in the early 21st century. Beijing has been cautious about supporting Japan's bid for a permanent seat in the Security Council, for it would weaken China's influence in regional and global politics. This suggests that there is potential for Chinese-Japanese rivalry.

Tokyo is trying to check the Chinese tial for Chinese Japanese rivalry.

Tokyo is trying to check the Chinese military buildup by holding out the possibility of reducing its aid to China and by engaging in bilateral security talks to increase the level of military transparency. Japanese aid to China is being more carefully disbursed than before, so that it will not be used for projects, such as ports and other major infrastructure development, that have military implications. Instead, more aid is being channeled to such areas as reducing the acid rain content of Chinese coal-fired power plants.

There has been a pattern of China's behavior toward its Asian neighbors in the last few years — one that seeks to the last few years — one that seeks to secure a superior position over them. It can be seen in the asymmetrical levels of official visitors. Beijing tends to send lower-ranking government leaders to the region than the other East Asian states send to China. Beijing's strategic interest is to become strong and prosperous so as to assert its own interests in relations with other Asian states.

China appears to find it easier to han-dle Mongolia, North Korea, Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos and Burma than to handie other countries in the region. The former are economically and militarily much weaker than China. Beijing can mtimidate them with economic and military sauctions as it has done in the past.

With wealthier, stronger or more distant East Asian nations, China cultivates cooperative links, hoping that these will serve to drive economic and political wedges between those countries and the United States. This does not mean that Beijing itself wants no cooperative relations with Washington. It is trying to build better relations with America. However, China also wants to minimize the possibility of having to compromise its own economic and security interests. China's desire to secure a superior position over its neighbors has been reinforced by remarkable economic success and the absence of clear, united resistance from East Asian countries. As a result, Beijing's political self-confidence has been strengthened and it has behaved more assertively with its neighbors in territorial and other disputes.

The region does not need a strong China. The evolution of the Chinese navy from a defensive coastal force into an offensive blue-water fleet would be destabilizing because it would change the balance of power in the Asia-Pacific region. This will happen if the Chinese economy continues to expand rapidly.

However, China's economic future is uncertain. If the reform program should run into serious difficulty, the Chinese leadership would probably have to slow down the development of capabilities to project military power. This would be better for regional security.

China cannot expand its national power at the expense of its economic welfare. It must remain fully engaged in the economic and political affairs of the Asia-Pacific region to ensure that the Chinese economy remains strong. Thus the Chinese leaders will learn the importance of continuous constructive engagement in regional peace and security. An economic slowdown in China may help this learning process.

To China From Germany, a Lesson in Unrepressed Democracy

BERLIN — The visit to Germany last week by Li Peng. China's prime minister, has cast much light on prospects for democracy in the two countries, both notable for failed attempts at liberal representative rule that led to harsh dictatorship.

Despite a small but rancous right wing. Germany has put its Nazi past behind and clearly established a working democra-cy that will be sustained into the future. But China is further from democracy than it was even 60 years ago. Mr. Li tested the democratic will of the Germans - and it emerged triumphant.

The man responsible for ordering the massacre of pro-democracy demonstrators in Beijing just over five years ago is evidently allergic to public demonstrations. He curtailed his original program on three occasions in Germany and finally left the country earlier than planned because he was exposed to public hecking and the threat of such hecking. fant, someone who rides roughshod over others but is hypersensitive himself. And, as the German press reported with some sausfaction, he undoubtedly lost face by running away.

Not, of course, that anyone, even the most hardened politi-cian, would be pleased by ban-ners with slogans like these, in Chinese and German: "Overthrow the Chinese Communist Butcher!" and "Li Peng is a Mass Murderer."

The fact that the charges are completely accurate did not help make them more palatable. Neither did the fact that Li Peng crushed the Tianaumen protests with tanks and has subsequently conducted a witchhunt against dissidents precisely to avoid seeing similar demonstrations in China.

The German government did nothing to halt the demonstra-tions. Officials stood aloof and neutral. Several even stressed that Germany does not engage in bloody suppression of dissent. The temptation to quash the demonstrators must nonetheless have been strong. Just coming out of a recession, Germany is counting on large sales to China to accelerate its recovery.

The impressive group of China specialists in the German Foreign Ministry knows full well that Beijing does not separate politics and trade. Backward in Venezuela

Venezuela, in the grip of a severe financial crisis, is trying to control it with methods that are making it dangerously worse. Last week President Rafael Caldera suspended a long list of constitutional guarantees - a necessity, he claimed, to combut the dark forces attempting to destroy the country's currency. He imposed controls on prices and foreign exchange in response to rising inflation. After a succes-sion of bank failures, he took over the whole banking system. The security forces have been carrying out raids on retailers accused of hoarding. The police have begun interrogating the regime's critics.

The crisis has been caused by a kind of bad policy that is very familiar in the continent's history. Most of Latin America, recognizing that nationalist populism is a mistake, is now moving toward open economies and relatively free markets. Venezuela is the exception. The reasons have a lot to do with the country's traditions, and a lot to do with oil. In the years of high oil prices Venezuela has been able to afford the old ways of running the country. But prices have been down for several years, and the damage, beginning with failed banks, is cumulative.

The previous president, Carlos Andrès Pèrez, tried to lead his country through the process that economists call adjustment, meaning adjustment to the realities of the world economy. The first reaction was a huge riot in Caracas, the second an attempted military coup by part of the army. Last year Mr. Perez was dumped out of office, ostensibly on grounds of corruption, and new elections were held. The winner was Mr. Caldera, an unreconstructed populist of the old school with a strong inclination toward a governmentmanaged economy. The results have included, predictably, a sharp rise in inflation and a drop in the currency's exchange rate, leading to last week's explosion of intervention and police action.

It is the latest example of the Latin tragedy — a country rich in natural resources and educated people who live amid deep poverty and insecurity. Venezuela is now in the grip of political ideas that are deeply implicated in the poor economic performance of Latin America during the past two generations. Most Latins, reflecting on that record, have decided to move in another direction, but not, so far, Venezuela. Instead it seems to be increasing the zeal with which it embraces a doctrine which, as its neighbors can testify, leads nowhere but down. Being a rich country, it still has time to reconsider — but not unlimited time.

Now it has Russia itself has realized that there is no room for it in either of the organizations in which the West makes up its collective mind. The basic trends are becoming visible and can no longer be blurred by convenient ambiguities.

In the run-up to the various Partneaship signing ceremonies, Boris Yeltsin no longer pushed for Rus-sian membership but instead tried to subject these institutions to a European superstructure, the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, in which Moscow would have a blocking vote. The Russians will continue to try, but their heart is no longer in it. In Brussels, Mr. Kozyrev accepted that sooner rather than later some of Russia's former Warsaw Pact allies would join the Western security club. He pleaded only that the extension proceed with care, since the Russian population needed convincing that the alliance was not planning "a tri-umphant march eastward."

So it is time to face the facts. There will be no overarching, allencompassing security system in Europe. NATO will not melt into a CSCE spanning from Vladivos-tok to Vancouver.

Instead, two separate groups are emerging.
The European Union and NATO are gradually incorporating Eastern Europe, including the Baltic states. At the same time, a cluster of former Soviet republics is taking shape around Russia. The central challenge of European security is how to make sure that the dividing line between the

By implying that any differences can be overcome by vagne partnership rhetoric, the West is fooling itself as well as Rissia. Afraid to admit the truth, Westcan governments will cling to ambiguity. But ambiguity has ceased to be creative; it has become counterproductive. By pretending that somehow Russia can still become a full member of the Western club, the West leaves both Russia and the East European democracies in the dark about their future status in Europe.

The proper response to Russia's inability to fit into any of the existing institutions is not to make believe that somehow it can be squeezed in but rather to create a new one, specifically designed to coordinate policies and precupt crises between the new West and the new East. This would have to consist of much more than the biannual meetings envisaged by the Russian-EU agreement or the vaporous consultation pledge given by NATO in the Partnership for Peace.
It should consist of a formal structure, the more formal the better, between NATO and Russia, with a secretariat, permanent representatives, hot lines and even parliamentary bodies — evcrything that can ensure day-to-day dialogue and consultation. It would give neither side a veto over what the other one wants to do, but it would translate NA-TO's apt formula "No veto, no surprise" into credible practice. To give up the dream of "one Europe whole and free" does not mean to forgo the right to hold Russia to established rules within its sphere of influence. On the contrary. But Russia can be held to these rules only if the West itself is serious about them. The current practice of warning Russia not to intervene in the "near abroad" while at the same time turning down requests for sending monitoring troops to the many trouble spots in the region is a dismal example of Western

The West's authority in the new European security setup will depend not on its sermons but on its deeds. Preaching without fol-lowing through signals to Mos-cow that the West really cares neither for Russia nor for how Russia conducts itself in what was once the Soviet Union. When the walls came down in Europe five years ago, the way ahead was obscure. It was wise then for the West to temporize. Today the basic trends are becoming visible, and they can no longer be camouflaged by convenient ambiguities. There is now a historic chance and need to build the future of European security on a sound basis. That takes realism as well as vision, clarity of purpose as well as a sense of responsibility. Too little of these qualities, unfortunately, is in evidence in Western chancelleries today.

But since then he has learned that talk-show bosts (and their callers) can play hardball, and he

All but shouting, he denounced the questions and accused conservative talk-show hosts such as Rush Limbaugh of keeping up a constant, unremitting drumbeat of cynicism."

That same week, in an interview in my magazine, Mr. Clin-ton's adviser George Stephanopoulos blasted talk radio's "tear it down" mentality and warned that the administration might move to revive the fairness doctripe, the old federal rule that broadcasters must cover all points of view on an issue.

Mr. Stephanopoulos knows very well that the doctrine, which Congress repealed seven years

First, talk radio's nature is to be freewheeling, even at times to the point of inaccuracy. It isn't as if such offenses went unpunished. Mr. Limbaugh, in particular, is coming under the wide-

QVC, CBS and Disney?

By Geraldine Fabrikant with Bernard Weinraub New York Times Service

NEW YORK - When the boards of CBS Inc. and QVC Network Inc. meet Tuesday and Wednesday to vote on a merger of the two companies. Wall Street and Hollywood executives say, the Walt Disney Co. may emerge as a wild card in the deal.

Ever since the merger announcement ocarly two weeks ago - and even before - many people in the television industry have been looking at Disney as a logical fit with a broadcast network.

CBS has been at the center of speculation about Disney because the network has been in play, and because its lack of a cable television connection and its loss of professional foothall to Fox have been seen as major liabilides.

"People think Disney might jump in be-cause Disney has longed for a network outlet for a long time and has the expertise to manage a network," said Harold Vogel, a media analyst who follows Disney for Merrill Lynch & Co. "This is a relatively easy way to get into both cable and oetwork."

Why Disney? Even though it may be better known for its theme parks and movies, Disney is a leading producer of network programming, including ABC's "Home Improvement," the most popular series on American television this season. But like other independent programmers. Disney may soon find itself at a disadvantage because federal rules are rapidly changing to let the oetworks produce and distribute more of the programs they broadcast.

Rumors have been circulating in the entertainment industry that Disney may be about to strike some sort of octwork parmership. Executives at CBS and QVC have denied the talk, and Disney executives have refused to comment on whether the company is planning a strategic move into broadcasting.

But many in the industry think there is a strong rationale for an alliance between Disney and a oetwork.

Getting shows onto the octworks is a dicey business for producers, and it is getting harder. The networks, once denied the right to produce and syndicate their own programs, have in recent years been unshackled by the Federal Communications Commission. By November 1995, they will be able not only to produce programs but also to sell rerun rights in the syndication market in the United States.

The networks are also increasing in-house production, which could make it more difficult for companies such as Disney to get their own shows on air.

■ Big-Time Lobbying

Disney spent more than $444,000 oo lohbying to win a $163 million subsidy for its proposed theme park from the Virginia Legislature. According to disclosure forms released Friday, Disney paid out as much money for lob bying in Richmond in the last year as the next five higgest spenders combined. The company spent four times as much as the main opponent of its park, the Piedmont Environmental Council, whose spending totaled about $106,000.

Prices now stand 50 percent above last autumn's eight-year lows, when a recession-hit market had more metal than it could use. Extra metal was also coming from Russia, which, desperate for foreign exchange and faced with the evaporation of domestic demand, exported hundreds of thousands of tons.

But the world's major producers earlier this year agreed to cut back their output to try to help prices which, in many cases, had fallen below the cost of produc-

TASHINGTON - International conspiracy theorists in Washington are putting about a new scare: Secret conclaves of bureaucrats, many from developing countries hostile to America, are about to take over the world trading system. Delegates from places like Burma and Cuba will impose their will on the United States, preventing it from enacting its own laws to protect the envi-ronment and the health of its population. - even from raising its own taxes.

This sinister bid for world governance will be launched by the new World Trade Organization that is to start operations next year, probably in Geneva, as successor to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Equally fervently, supporters of the WTO, including the U.S. administration, argue that it will not diminish the country's sovereignty over its own affairs by Both are wrong, The WTO is not the monster portrayed by its opponents but, like many other international treaties and agreements, it does impinge on U.S. sovereignty. The point is that it is well worthwhile to sacrifice a little autonomy to gain the WTO's benefits, which will be considerable.

It is difficult, however, for the WTO's supporters to make this argument in Washington, where any perceived loss of national sovereignty arouses strong oppo-sition — particularly in a U.S. Congress anxious to guard its right to conduct trade policy. So, as the administration tries to persuade Congress to ratify the latest world trade agreement, which sets up the WTO, it is having to be a little deceitful on the sovereignty issue.

But the WTO's opponents are being deceifful too, disingenuously arguing the

That is simply wrong. Washington's acceptance of the WTO was an essential part of the final package deal struck in Geneva last December and it cannot be

Nor is it true the United States is going to be pushed around by the likes of Cuba and Burma. The way the WTO makes decisions will not be all that much different from GATT, and the United States, as the world's largest economy, is certainly going to maintain its ample weight.

What is true, on the other hand, is that all nations are losing sovereignty as the world economy goes global. Even the United States, for instance, has little control over its currency. As traditional economic barriers fall, policy instruments that used to be of solely domestic concern can be used to impede trade.

U.S. rules on automobile fuel efficiency, for example, are legitimate grounds for complaint if they discriminate a-gainst imported cars that are engineered to a different standard, as the European Union is currently alleging in GATT.

It will certainly be possible to chal-lenge many such practices in the WTO which does not mean, of course, that the WTO will automatically uphold the challenge. If it does not blindly uphold such challenges, it will no longer be possible for Washington — or anyone else, for that matter — to veto the outcome. That is one of the real transfers of power to the new organization. Another is that U.S. use of unilateral trade action, and retaliation, will be much restricted, The point is that these are all very good things. It is good for everyone, including the United States, if Congress's protectionist tendencies, and its fondness for unilateral bullying, are restrained. In fact, it was the United States. which brings the most trade complaints, that quite rightly wanted to end the na-tional veto over GATT rulings.

The United States, arguably the world's most open economy, can only gain as more countries are required to play by the same rules. It should be happy to have a stronger policeman to enforce those rules, even if it has to obey

Bonds and Dollar Weigh on Shares

NEW YORK — U.S. stocks fell for the first time in three days, tracking losses in bonds and the dollar, as signs of rising interest rates overwhelmed optimism about second-quarter

A slump in drug shares, led by Eli Lilly & Co., paced the stock market's retreat.

As interest rates rise, cash equivalents such as Treasury bills become more competitive with stocks. Higher rates also raise corporate borrowing costs and diminish earnings.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which fell as much as 28.49 points, pared its losses to close down 6.15 points, at 3,702.99.

Eleven stocks fell for every nine that rose on the New York Stock Exchange. Trading was moderate, with about 222.29 million shares changing hands on the Big Board, down from 233.62 million on Friday.

Stocks fell as the yield on the Treasury's benchmark 30-year bond jumped five basis points, to 7.75 percent, and the dollar sank. As long as the dollar is weakening, foreign investors are likely to avoid U.S. bonds

Asante Technologies Inc. closed down 2% at 5, setting a 52-week low of 4%, after the maker of computer-networking accessories posted a third-quarter loss of 3 cents a share, compared with earnings of six cents a year ago.

"The U.S. now is competing for capital with other nations. The Fed has to stop these mealy-mouthed quarter-point moves and get rates up," he said, adding that only then would interest in the Treasury bond market be rekindled.

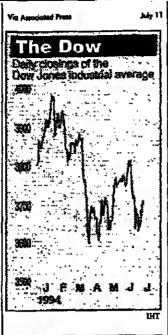

The price of the benchmark 30-year Treasury bond fell Monday, losing 10/32 point, to 83. That raised its yield to 7.72 percent from 7.69 percent Friday. Nicholas Sargen, of Pruden-

Delta Airlines Plans New Job Cuts

ATLANTA (Renters) - Delta Air Lines Inc. said Monday it would eliminate 4,500 full-time jobs over the next 12 months from its customer-service division, continuing a cost-cutting effort aimed at making Delta a more competitive airline.

The reductions are projected to contribute to the division's goal of achieving $175 million to $250 million in annual savings. The latest round of job cuts represents about 20 percent of the customer service unit, said Delta spokesman Bill Berry. Delta last month also cut 20 percent, or 2,500, jobs, from its echnical operations division as part of the restructuring plan.

Abbott Labs Has Profitable Quarter

NORTH CHICAGO, Illinois (AP) - Abbott Laboratories said

Monday its second-quarter profit jumped 9 percent amid improved sales of all its drug and health product categories.

Net earnings were $377 million, compared with $346 million in the comparable year-ago period, on sales of $2.20 billion, up from $2.07 billion. Worldwide sales of pharmaceuticals and nutritional products were no 9 percent from last year subile sales of hospital products were up 9 percent from last year, while sales of hospital and laboratory products gained 3 percent.

The company said it expects a substantial payoff from two second-quarter developments — an agreement with Hoffman-LaRoche Inc. to cross-license each others' gene amplification technologies and the introduction of a diagnostic system for medium- and high-volume laboratories to give faster results from a variety of medical tests.

U.S. Said to Lack Competitiveness

WASHINGTON (WP) - The United States has not solved its underlying competitiveness problems despite the recent strength of the economy and the rebound of many of its manufacturing industries, a panel of business, labor and academic leaders warned in a report released Monday.

The Washington-based Council on Competitiveness said that

The Washington-based Council on Competitiveness said that recent gains in worker productivity, investment and export growth were largely the natural outgrowth of economic recovery after a recession and should not be confused with the "resolution of long-term structural problems" facing the U.S. economy.

A rising trade deficit, a persistently low national savings rate, and the continued poor performance of the public education system were all strong indications that the country's "competitiveness problem is not behind us," said Paul Allaire, chairman of the council.

Dell Will Stop Retail-Store Selling

AUSTIN, Texas (Bloomberg) - Dell Computer Corp., in a return to the strategy that first brought it success, said it will stop selling personal computers in five retail chains and focus on

"more effective ways to reach the consumer."

For the Texas computer maker, founded by Michael Dell as a mail-order business run out of his University of Texas dorm room, that primarily means taking orders from customers over the telephone. Sales through retailers, which once approached 10 percent of the company's revenue, are expected to dip below 2 percent of revenue in its fiscal second quarter ending July 31, said Michelle Moore, a Dell spokeswoman.

Dow Jones & Co. said Monday its profit rose 15.6 percent in the second quarter, to $46 million, on a 7.6 percent increase in revenue, led by strength in its information services division. Ranks Takeover Increases Profit For Tomkins

LONDON - Tomkins PLC said Monday that its pretax profit, boosted by the acquisition of the food company Ranks Hovis McDougall PLC, had surged 50 percent in the year ended May 1.

The British conglomerate, whose products range from Smith & Wesson handguns to Murray bicycles, posted earnings of £257.1 million ($395 million), up from £171 million a Tomkins said the increase in pretax profit reflects its policy of acquiring troubled businesses at a discount and bolstering margins by cost-cutting and capital investment. Greg Hutchings, the company's chief executive, said this policy had helped Tomkins outperform the market.

If the contribution to earnings from Ranks Hovis McDougall is subtracted, Tomkins' pretax profit increased by .. 14 percent, to £130.6 million.

The company said it would pay a dividend for the second half of 4.545 pence per share, making the dividend for the full year amount to 7.38 pence, up

16 percent from a year earlier. The company said it had increased its dividend by more than 10 percent every year for the past 12 years and "we remain committed to this progressive policy." The net profit was after a payment of 15.2 billion francs to the state, and it did not include earnings from units managed

The company said a difficult economic climate had influenced its results and its sales rise came mostly from new services such as its Bi-Bop mobile system.

"We continue to benefit from growth in the U.S. economy, while in the U.K. signs of recovery are becoming clearer," said Mr. Hutchings. "The market background is improving, albeit slowly and unevenly, while our order books, in the aggregate, are well ahead of the same period last year."

Mr. Hutchings said Tomkins would continue to make acquisitions but that no major purchase would be made in its existing product lines. He said he considcred any deal of more than £400 million as a "major" acquisition.

"The cash surplus means that we can gear up for an acquisi-tion very easily, but we will use a major acquisition to broaden our product range," said Mr. Hutchings: The company ended the year with a cash surplus of £156 million, despite the acquisition of two businesses from Canada's Noma Industries Ltd. for $142 million.

Tomkins has completed the first stage of a three-year cost-cutting and reorganization program at Ranks Hovis McDougall. As part of the job cutting program, the company reduced Ranks Hovis McDougall's staff by about 3,000 employees, to 24,000. The company said there

MADRID - Spain's agreement to help bail out Volkswagen AG's troubled SEAT unit is a case study, say some analysts, in how to

After six months of haggling VW President Ferdi-nand Piech and Spanish Minister of Industry and Energy Juan Manuel Eguiagaray hammered out the accord, under which the Spanish gov-ernment will spend 30 billion pesetas ($230 million), ostensibly to fund research and development projects at SEAT.

For Spain, which main-tained throughout the talks that it would not give SEAT direct subsidies or help finance layoffs, the tariff was the price necessary to ensure the company's survival as an independent brand, after repeated threats by the Germans to turn it into a VW chasing chief, José Ignacio López de Arriortúa, said the accord would be a help but not enough in itself.

"The company has some very competitive products, and the deal is a big help, but the important thing is a fundamental change that must take place within the company."

Mr. López de Arriortúa, speaking at a university semi-nar, said SEAT must direct its attention more towards client satisfaction, improving the quality of its products and the service it provides.

In addition to the 30 billion pesetas from Madrid, SEAT will receive 8 billion pesetas from the government of Cata-lonia. (Bloomberg, Reuters)

Pressure' on Siemens Profit

Bloomberg Business News

PRAGUE — Siemens AG, the German electronics company, said Monday that operating profit for the financial year ending on Sept. 30 would fall as much as 15 percent from the prioryear level because of price deterioration and stagnating sales.

Noting that prices in some areas had fallen by 10 percent or more, Chief Executive Heinrich von Pierer said at a press conference in the Czech capital that net income was "under pressure," first eight months of the current financial year.

Karl-Hermann Baumann, the company's chief financial officer, said that net income would time gains from the sale of the company's pacemaker activities.

In the previous year, Siemens' net profit had edged up 1 percent, to 1.98 billion Deutsche marks ($1.26 billion). The company has warned on a number of occasions that net earnings would drop in the current year.

Siemens' share price reacted little to the news, edging up 50 pfennig, to 655 DM.

Mr. von Pierer said that Germany's economic recovery was not expected to boost Siemens's earnings mitil the 1994-1995 financial year. "We know that electrical engineering and electronics are always at the end of the business cycle."

Mr. von Pierer said that the costs of shutting a nuclear fuel plant in Hanau had weighed on earnings this year but that the semiconductor capital that net income was "under pressure," business was making a profit for the first time in even though sales had risen 3.5 percent in the a decade and was expected to finish the financial year in the black.

The company said it expected to double sales in Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union nevertheless be "just under the results from last by next year. New Chief Of Finance Opposes Dual Rands

JOHANNESBURG-Chris Liebenberg, who is to take over as finance minister of South Africa in October, said Monday he would try to reduce the country's budget deficit and move away from the country's dual-currency system.

"South Africa has been so successful in re-entering the world political arena, and now we must also get back into the financial world arena successfully," Mr. Liebenberg said. "We must do this by achieving what the international markets and agencies see as reasonable and fair."

He said the budget deficit had to be cut in order for the country's Reconstruction and Development Program — its post-apartheid blueprint — to work. The deficit for 1994-95 is forecast to be 6.6 percent of gross domestic product.

"All of us have agreed it's got to be a lost lower, so the focus will be still on less government consumption," he said.

The International Monetary Fund has accepted South Africa's current budget deficit level but has urged the country to push it toward the more respec able level of 3 percent of GDP.

South African officials have said they were concerned a high budget deficit would propel inflation.

Mr. Liebenberg also strongly crincized the dual-currency system, which has been in place since 1990, and said abolishing the system would be studied.

"Ultimately, we have to have a unitary currency and forex controls that are accepted as the norm by international players," he said. "You want to do that to enhance investment rather than to present an opportunity for you to withdraw your money."

The South African government will have to prove that and its economic philosophies are sustainable before a free foreign exchange regime can be inplemented, he said.

Derek Keys, the current fi-nance minister, resigned last week, effective in October. He cited personal reasons.

If anything, the risk now is that South Korea's economy might overheat next year. boosting inflation and interest rates and undermining the stock market's climb. To be sure, the South Korean market remains among the risk-iest in the world. North Korea is among the most isolated countries in the world, there is little hard information on Kim Jong Il, and it is impossible to rule out the prospect of political collapse and civil war, possibly nuclear.

Most of the selling on Monday came from individuals, whose share of the market has been in steady decline in recent years. Domestic and foreign institutions, in contrast, appear to accept the government's expec-tation of continuity in economic policies that have allowed South Korean businessmen to visit the north and engage in limited trade and investment.

"There's no real basis for prodicting that the policy that the new leadership will pursue will be radically different," Foreign Minister Han Sung Joo of South Korea said Monday. Foreign analysts said de-clines on the Korean stock market could provide a good opportunity to buy shares. The Finance Ministry restricts foreign ownership to 10 percent of most issues, but it has indicated it will raise this limit in two stages to 15 percent by the mid-dle of 1995. The increase could lower the premium foreign investors now pay to acquire shares of companies traded on an informal telephone market. The most attrac-

Australia Dollar Halves Profit At Alcoa Unit

MELBOURNE - Weak said Monday that stockpiles of prices and a strengthening Aus-aluminum in the industrialized tralian dollar combined to slash first-half profit by 50 percent at metric tons from 3.644 million. Alcon of Australia Ltd., the world's leading producer of alumina, the company said Mon-

Although Alcoa predicted an eventual improvement in its profitability, it said the remainder of the year would be diffi-cult. The aluminum industry has ended last year at $1,108.50 and been suffering from oversupply, but rising demand linked to improving world economies and an international agreement to reduce supplies are expected to boost profitability.

Alcoa said its profit in the first half fell 52 percent, to 124.7 million Australian dollars ($9) million) from 258.4 million in the first six months of 1993, when earnings were boosted by a 59.7 million dollar gain related to reduced tax rates.

Profit excluding one-time gains fell by 37 percent in the latest period as sales fell to 982.5 , million dollars from 1.07 billion.

The reduced profit was due mainly to lower U.S. dollar prices for the company's products and lower sales volumes for aluminum and gold. A strong Australian dollar, which reduces revenue expressed in the local currency, also had an adverse impact, the company said.

Alcoa of Australia is 51 percent-owned by Aluminum Co. of America, while Western Mining Corp. Holdings Ltd. currently holds 48.25 percent. Under an agreement announced last week, Western Mining and Alcoa will merge their worldwide alumina operations. That combination will include the transfer of a 9 percent stake in Alcoa of Austra- of more than 100 million Australia to its U.S. parent from Westem Mining.

JVC Says Goodbye to Hollywood Electronics Company Shuns the Risks of Making Movies

TOKYO - Five years ago, Victor Co. of Japan led a charge by Japanese electronics makers into the glamorous world of movies when it earmarked $100 million to set up a Hollywood production and distribution company.

Now, Victor, a video equipment maker better known as IVC, has quietly slipped out of the director's chair. Instead of making films, it is just distributmg them

JVC, trying to return to the black after two consecutive years of losses, reorganized its Hollywood strategy after judging that the costs and risks involved in making movies were too high.

The decision reflects the difficulties faced by Japan's electronics companies in the competitive world of motion pictures. JVC's California subsidiary, Largo Entertainment, had successes like "Unlawful Entry" and "Point Break." But the Japanese parent wanted to find a surer way of making money in Hollywood.

"Making films is the most risky part of the movie business, because you don't know if you will wind up with a good product until you're actually done with it," said Ryonichi Asada, a JVC spokesman. JVC's consolidated net loss widered to 26.8 billion yen ($272 million) in the year ended March 31 from 25.5 billion yen the previous year. The company said in May that it hopes to break even this year. As a result of the reorganization, Largo no longer distributes movies in the massive North American market, concentrating instead on distribution rights for films in international markets, including Japan.

"Distribution carries a small risk, because you make a decision on whether to go with a movie after you've actually seen it," Mr. Asada said. Mr. Asada added that JVC's retreat from distribution in North America was tied to its decision to stop making films.

Distribution is safer because you make a decision on whether to go with a movie after yon've actually seen it.'

Ryonichi Asada, a JVC spokesman. "Major production companies in the U.S.

tend to take care of distribution on their own," he said. "And independent films tend to distribute through major houses."

JVC was the first Japanese electronics maker to move into Hollywood, when it established Largo with Lawrence Gordon, the producer of "Die Hard" and "Field of Dreams," as chairman in August 1989. Shortly after, Sony Corp. spent $3.4 billion to acquire Columbia Pictures Entertainment and its music business from Coca-Cola Co. Then, Matsushita Elec-tric Industrial, which has a 52.4 percent stake in JVC, plunked down more than $6 billion for MCA Inc., owner of Uni-

The investments did not stop there. In 1990, Pioneer Electronics Corp. began investing in Caroleo Pictures Inc., eventually taking about a 20 percent stake.

The companies' motives were simple: by stepping into the production side of the movie and music business, Japan's electronics giants gained direct cootrol of the entertainment products needed to feed sales of their audio and video equipment.

"The leisure market in the U.S. is quite big, said Eric Gan, an analyst at Goldman, Sachs & Co. in Tokyo. Indeed movie ticket sales and video rentals total about $13 billion a year in America, compared with about 65 billion yen ($663 million) in Japan, he said.

"Japanese dominate the hardware part of the U.S. market; they knew they needed to control the movie side, the software side, too," added Mr. Gan.

While the concept should help build the companies' business in the long term, the returns to date have hardly been breathtaking

So far, the biggest winner in Holly-wood has been MCA, which took in worldwide box-office sales of $900 millioo for "Jurassic Park."

"Nobody is making money, except for MCA," Mr. Gan said.

For Japanese electronics makers, the poor return afforded by Hollywood could oot have come at a worse time. After pouring billions of dollarrs into acquisitions, the companies saw their profits plummet amid a worldwide slump in electronics markets and a rise in the value of the yen.

Cloud of Strike-Talk* Is Hanging Over The All-Star Game

By Claire Smith New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Strike, Like

The game will be played Tuesday. And the anticipation this time around is described by some in major league basebal as being greater than last year highly successful All-Star week in Baltimore. Perhaps the ticket demand is so great because of the wondrous numbers being posted by players like Jeff Bagwell and Ken Griffey Jr. But perhaps Pittsburgh has also become the place to be because so many fans are now convinced this game will be the only jewel the sport will be able to showcase this year, so gloomy are fore-casts of a long, bitter strike.

In other words, eat, drink and be merry, for tomorrow the game may die. The players hold in great disdain the owners' demands for a salary cap, and they seem to be prepared to wield their harmer — the right to strike — for the first time since 1985.

And unlike the relatively small blip on the screen that was the two-day strike in 1985; what lies ahead may turn out to be as hostile as the 50-day strike

This is the atmosphere under which the players and owners come together in Pittsburgh. As a result, the game will provide not only a stage for the talent but a platform for the issues. Players like the Yankees'

Wade Boggs and Januay Key, the Dodgers Mike Piazza, the Rangers' Ivan Rodriguez and the Expos' Marquis Grissom will likely address the division races their teams are waging. But they will also have to address questions about a strike . and its possible consequences on those races.

In the same way, therey, Matt Williams, Frank Thomas and Affect Belle will be quizzed not only about their spirited chase of Roger Maris's record of 61 home runs in a season but about the calendar prematurely running out on them. For as Thomas said weeks ago, "We all know there will be a work stoppage."

Indeed, most of us do assume that. For those who don't, the All-Star Game will offer vivid warnings. Even as the All-Stars begin their practicing Monday, other players who have converged on the city will be meeting as members of the union's executive board. That gathering will carry just as much, if not more, import than anything that can possibly unfold on the field at Three Rivers Stadium.

Of course, this isn't the first time this year, this week or even this day that the real world has NEW YORK — Strike. Like this day that the real world have a giant storm cloud, that world will hang over Pittsburgh this week, obscuring what would otherwise be baseball's most have elbowed their way onto sports pages, with no end in Star Game.

Because the business of sports now pervades the coverage of sports, many decry the loss of the safe haven that games once offered. Some argue, though, that these so-called games have always been about business. And those who make that argument include the pitchers Goose Gossage and Joe Black.

To Gossage's knowledge, he and Charlie Hough might be the only players to have been through every work stoppage in the major leagues.

Gossage, now a reliever with the Seattle Mariners, was a rookie with the White Sox in 1972 when the players first struck. He knew little of the issues that April, he said. This much he did know. "I was on the streets of Chicago with a pocket full of change," he said. "I couldn't call home for money because my mother didn't have any." He at least had a sister living in Chicago: But his minimum wage of $12,500, once enticing. was now in danger. "I had $27 in my pocket," he said. "It was Gossage survived. To star in the majors: And, alas, to see all the battles: more strikes in 1980, 1981 and 1985; the lockout of players by owners in 1973, 1976 and 1990.

Gossage, long since schooled on the issues, says, "Everything is much clearer now." And he is a walking example of how a union has learned to prepare its members for battle.

Before Joe Black joined the Brooklyn Dodgers in 1952, he played in the Negro leagues, and he remembers how in the 1940s, before those players could join the majors, let alone a mion, there was widespread disdain for the position the Negro league owners held on salaries. He remembers two all-star squads from the Negro leagues acted on that disdain by refusing to take the field before an all-star game.

"We refused to leave the chibhouse," Black said. "The owners came down, but we wouldn't leave. We got our money. We went all the way from $25 to $75 for the game."

Modern-day players would probably smile at such a story but cringe at such paltry sums of money. Owners would probably cringe at any tale of management cave-ins but smile at nostalgic references to dollarfigures.

Scorching the Pack, Indurain Takes Lead

By Samuel Abt nal Revald Tribune BERGERAC, France - Big

Mig is back. Riding with his accustomed power, Miguel Indurain trashed the Tour de France pack Monday in an individual time trial and started toward his fourth consecutive victory in the world's greatest bicycle race.

There had been some doubts about the Spaniard's strength and speed because he finished third in the three-week Giro d'Italia in June after two consecutive victories in that race. Worse, he failed to win a time trial after dominating the race against the clock in the Giro for two years.

Not to worry. Indurain an-swered his critics in the initial six kilometers (3.7 miles) as he clocked the fastest time to that first checkpoint. Then he began gathering speed.

Barely 10 kilometers later he had overhauled the rider who started two minutes before him, Lance Armstrong of the Motorola team. Other victims began turning up regularly in Indur-ain's wake.

At the end of the 64-kilome-Fer time trial from Perigueux to Bergerac in the hospitable Perigord region of southwestern France, the carriage was nearly Monday with a deficit of 4:22.

Indurain, who rides for the Banesto team, finished at least four minutes ahead of all 175 other riders except for his main rival, Tony Rominger. And the Swiss, who rides for Mapei-Clas, was able to limit his loss only to a big two minutes.

The winner was timed in one hour 15 minutes 58 seconds over a demanding course in a stifling heat in the low 90s Fahrenheit (30s centigrade). An intermittent light breeze did nothing to hinder the riders but kept tens of thousands of fans along the course from swoon-

This 81st Tour will enter the Pyrenees on Wednesday and the three-week race is scheduled in Paris on July 24.

Although there probably will be many challenges and sur-prises before then, Indurain an-swered the big question Mon-day. He regained his rhythm, he said, in the first eight stages of

He demonstrated that rhythm as he rode along a twisty back-country road that had several patches of melted tar. Up the gradual climbs and down the sinuous descents went Indurain, his body immobile from the waist up to reduce resistance, his face set in concentration, his line of attack through the many turns always

He was hoping to monitor his development in the race against the clock since the last Tour and the finding was mixed: Last year he lost 6:04 to the winner, again Indurain, but finished 27th

SOUTH BEND, Indiana -Notre Dame will join the Big East Conference in all sports except football in July 1995.

But that decision did not rule exception."

The struggle in recent years Notre Dame's men's basketball program has fueled speculation that the school would. eventually have to abandon its status as an independent in the sport to gain the benefits of a high-profile league.

That speculation reached its peak late last winter, as differ-ences between football and baskethall interests within the Big East created what Commissioner Mike Tranghese called the most serious threat in the histo-

But the league saved itself with the compromise admission of Rutgers and West Virginia, a move that secured the continned full-time membership of Boston College, Miami, Pittsburgh and Syracuse. But the financial prospect of splitting revenues with at least 12 other members was seen at the time as being less appealing to the Irish.

Will a Smile Turn Up on the Turnberry Course?

By Larry Dorman

TURNBERRY, Scotland - There is not one Turnberry. There are two, three, perhaps even four Tumberrys. Now fair, now foul, now warm, now cold, the climate and mood on the stark northwest coast of Scotland change more often than in the European Union. And the swiftness and variety of the changes can be just as

The Turnberry we encounter this day, the weekend before the 123d British Open golf championship is to begin, must be a close kin to the day the Scots decided to invent whisky. Wind, like the poet's whetted knife, slices across the Ailsa Course, blowing pinpoint, cold raindrops that hit the skin with a buck-shot sting. Whitecaps bare their teeth across the gray waters of the Firth of Clyde, and just one solitary golfer is brave enough to make his way around the links. Bending at the waist as he comes up the 18th fairway leaning into the gale is the familiar figure of Gary Player. Naturally. Who else could it be? The man, now 58, is playing in his 40th "Something happens when I get here, I'm telling you, something magi-cal," Player says. There is just no place like it. This is golf. Why, today was so much different from yesterday.

I hit 3-iron into greens where I hit 3-iron just a day before. It can change in an hour, a minute,"

Besides, Player could tell you, this is nothing. You should have seen it in 1973, when a tent blew into the Firth of Clyde in the John Player Classic or during the first round of the 1986 British Open here, when the wind blew between 36 and 49 miles (58 and 79 kilometers) an hour, and 49 players the field could not break 80.

That was the day that Greg Norman called "the toughest ever in golf." tournament, the observation was selfserving, but accurate.

It is possible to sit shivering on on the promontory above the 12th green, next to the monument commemorating the dead aviators who trained on the runways that are now covered by fairways, and look back to the time when these grounds served a much more critical purpose. During World War I, the Royal Flying Corps trained here. The Royal Air Force took over Turnberry during World War II, laying runways and converting the sprawling hotel into an officers' mess and hospital. It seems impossible to believe now, looking across the links land at the scrubbed elegance of the renovated

Landing a golf ball on a green is, by comparison, a small matter, history and surroundings of the site should serve to mitigate against players becoming too bloated with selfimportance. The elements also conspire to do that. Here in the remote, craggy land hard by the sea, there are no certainties other than that life is a struggle. On the surface, it appears the golf course should play easier than it did in 1986, when the field stroke average was 75.4. How much easier? The rough should be thin, owing to a couple of unseasonably dry seasons, and the greens are receptive. Turnberry's course superintendent, George Brown, went so far as to predict recently that someone might shoot 59 on the 6,957-yard (6,349meter), par-70 golf course.

It would seem more likely for a phantom squadron of Wellingtons to resurface from the firth and land on the remnants of the runway to the left of the 12th hole.

The most likely script will be for Turnberry to show all four of its faces, and to smile, finally, on a worthy

Racehorse Arazi Undergoes Surgery NEWMARKET, England (AP) - The former French wonder horse Arazi was under intensive care Monday after undergoing

The 1991 Breeders' Cup winner, now at Sheikh Mohammed ibn Rashid al Maktoum's stud farm, was operated on after showing symptoms of colic. "Arazi's symptoms were serious enough to convince us that we had to open him up to see what the problem was," said Justin Wadham, a director of the stud farm. "What we

was," said Justin Wadham, a director of the stud farm. "What we found was a lot less serious than was first feared and, provided he gets through this critical stage, the prognosis is good."

Arazi scored a stunning victory in the Breeders' Cap Juvenile in Kentucky, and after several other big victories was billed as the best 2-year-old produced in Europe. But Arazi failed to live up to expectations in 1992, finishing eighth at the Kentucky Derby and fifth in the St. James's Palace Stakes at Ascot, England.

Old Order Changes: Once-Hungry Germans Now Down and Out

EAST RUTHERFORD, New Jersey - Rudi Völler, 34 years old and retired once already, and his striking partner Jürgen Klinsmann, who will turn 30 soon, were standing in the midfield circle, leaning over the ball. They wanted to kick it -couldn't their countrymen see? One was going to tap it forward to the other and the ball would get to rolling and the Germans wouldn't stop until it was in that other net.

That is the way the Germans play - you hurt them, they hurt you worse until you can't take any more; they attack with a Doberman's trigger. Klinsmann looked over his shoulder and ... where were they?

His teammates were walking, half-jogging. Couldn't they see he and Völler leaning over the ball like statues — the heroic kind? The statues began to wave as frantically as traffic cops. And so the Germans, the defending World Cup champions, were beaten Sunday, even before it could dawn on them that they were losing. And they were losing to Bulgaria — Bulgaria! — which had beaten Germany once in 17 matches, which had never won a World Cup match as of 14 days before. The Germans, with three world championships in hand, had lost just once in 10 previous quarterfinals. Their rivals, Italy and Brazil, already had advanced to the semifinals — there was a private race on to decide which would become the first to win four World Cups - and each now understands completely how much the world has come to change at Old men who fail to learn humility can be such fools. All of the German strength and history still amounted to one flimsy goal. The Bulgarians had been trying to revolt with one breakaway after another trying the strength of the stre er, even as Jürgen Kohler was marking Firisto Stoitchkov, the Bulgarian star at Barcelona, out of existence As the Germans look back on it now, they will see that Germany's expense.

question the people who were already prepared to retire. I question their preparation. You shouldn't talk about retirement 10 minutes after the game."

The German manager, Berti Vogts, placed some blame on defenders for not jumping to contest the shot, but he was more disappointed with Illgner's guident attentions.

"It shows some weakness of character," Vogts said. "This is the first real human disappointment

I to themselves Sunday as their 5-foot, 5-inch (1.65meter) midfielder, Thomas Hässler, was beaten on a header by Letchkov.

Said Matthäus, "We had our smallest man trying to defend Letchkov. Hässler is not that big a champion at headers."

Said Vogts, "You can't leave Hassier alone when a player the quality of Letchkov is coming down on

And said Hässler: "I have nothing to say on the second goal I'm not supposed to be in there. I was running, but the pass was already there. We lost a game that we couldn't lose."

The last time Germany relinquished the lead in a World Cup match was June 21, 1978, when Vogts, a defender at the time, turned over a 1-0 lead by accidentally putting the ball in his own net.

Meanwhile, the Bulgarians were congratulating Letchkov for mose than his goal. "I had an interest-ing conversation with Letchkov on how Germany Asked about Iligner's flat-footed response to the free kick, Vogts said, "It's good that he is quitting." would play and it was very helpful," said the Bulgarian coach, Dimitar Penev. This is because Letchkov. now lives in Germany and plays for Hambard.

There is a new world order developing, decentralized and unpredictable, and as stirring as the last postwar order, which began with Hungary's 1954 final upset by West Germany. The new deal began to seep in with Denmark's 1992 victory over Germany in the European Championships, weakening the champion's aura, and it has spread to the Balkans, where Bulgaria and Romania used to be isolated and

Now its players have seen the world, and they aren't so easily intimidated. The Bulgarians clearly had more to gain than the Germans, who seemed to be defending their reputation rather than affirming it. Such have been the pressures on Vogts, who was

it. Such have been the pressures on vogts, who was always going to be judged more harshly than Beckenbauer, the winner of Germany's 1990 world title.

"Twe been thinking it over the last lew days, but I haven't really made up my mind," said Vogts, when asked about his own resignation. "As long as I'm still having fun, I want to continue to coach.

Is it his fault that the country has failed to develop a wave of young talent, forcing him to call Völler and Andreas Brehme out of retirement? The future isn't what it used to be, as some Texas singer has probably sing, and so Vogts is expected to resign. Germany may choose to hire from its league rather than from within the federation. "We in Germany have to start acknowledging the performances of other teams," Vogts said. "Other nations have caught up and we have to search for new ways. After this defeat, we will have to show we are a real team. Soccer will go on in Germany, of

In Germany, the News Is Nothing but Bad

BERLIN - The one-word headline Monday in Bild, Germany's biggest-circulation daily, said almost everything: "Out!" It was a surprise ouster for the defending World Cup champions, losing 2-1 to dark-horse Bulgaria, and it reverberated like a thud back home. Fireworks crackled in Berlin for Germany's one goal against Bulgaria. But then came the two-goal Bulgarian burst, and the top item on the late news - reported before President Bill Clinton's arrival on a state visit to Germany - was the stunning defeat of the national soccer heroes. There followed much second-guessing in Monday's newspapers.

PERSONALS

Bild and other media cast doubt on some of Vogts's player choices. The analysts on ZDF television thought the coach's postmatch comments — looking ahead to European competition — showed insensitivity to the magnitude of the quarterfinal loss in the World Cup.

The Berliner Morgenpost headline captured the swift turnsround in the game with the words: "Bitter! World Cup Out in 200 Seconds" — referring to the two quick Bulgarian goals that erased a German lead in the second half.

The daily Die Welt asked Vogts if he was thinking of resigning. The coach replied that he had always said he would consider calmly after the World Cup what to do. But he added: "As long as I'm enjoying it, I'll continue. And I'm enjoying it."

The fans had a different view, German

TV showed scenes of delicious contrast: In Bulgaria, people danced in the streets with flags and music, while Germans at an open-air tavern in Cologne sat with leaden faces as defeat sank in. In Switzerland, the mass-circulation Blick daily said the German team had thought it was invincible. The Blick head-line read, "Germany weeps — the rest of the world laughs."

After the loss Sunday, the German goalkeeper, Bodo Illgner, said he was retiring from international competition. "I told the coach in the changing rooms that I will not play for the national team anymore," said Illgner, 27. "I had made the decision to quit already before, but I wanted to leave with another World Cup title. It didn't work out, but I am standing (AP, AFP) by my decision."

AST RUTHERFORD, New Jersey — The road to the World Cop championship goes through Western Europe. It blasts down the Autobahn through Germany, makes a screeching dip down the Autostrada into Italy, careens back into the Autoroute of France and then races down the Autopista of Spain, toward the riches cred precincts of the World Cup semifinals. They are not ausland-er or stranleri at all. These are tried and true practitioners of West European football. It's all enough Yanks can place themselves in favorable positions in Europe. Some day our lads may grow up to be like the Bulgariana, those battle-hardened soldiers of fortune who have plied their trade in Western Europe.

These guys were not rounded up in a park in Sofia. This is not some dream team from the Bulgarian Pub League. These guys are pros. They get around. You can tell that from hearing all the languages being spoken at the metallic stanchions that separate the players from the howling hordes of journalists in the dismal nether regions of World Cup stadiums.

on Sunday, which eliminated the defending champions and set up an Italy-Bulgaria semifinal on Wednesday, the Bulgarian players spoke in weathered baldness of his dome, was speaking in German with the German reporters. He earns his living, after all, in Hamburg. When officials finally directed Letchkov to a Bulgarian-English interpreter, somebody asked him if he had given any advice to his coach about the German players.

"I told him we would have to be very careful with Hässler," Letchkov said. Come to think of it, Thomas Hässler plays for Rome, so how could it, Thomas Hässler plays for Rome, so how could derers play the Italians, who, to a man, stay home Letchkov have much first-hand experience with in the ultrarich Italian league. This is not necesthe stumpy midfielder? But everybody knows everybody at this level. That's why they call it the Barcelona. When Stoichkov finally was herded in front of an interpreter, somebody asked if he would now avenge the recent 4-0 massacre of his Barcelona chib by Milan, eight of whose players are currently with Italy.

"Let us not talk about Barcelona and Milan," Stoichkov said. "We are now talking about na-And this was true. When he blasted home his free kick, Stoichkov went into his Rickey Henderson home-run trot, crossing himself and blowing kisses at the very same time, and head-ing directly to the little cluster of Bulgarian flags, out here in the swamplands of New Jersey. And that's why they call it the World Cap.

Krassimir Balakov — he of the dark Harpo Marx curis and the never-ending sprints up and down the field — was answering my dreadful Spanish in his accented Portuguese. He is a cult

The Bulgarians scatter so far in search of the almighty peseta, the ever-powerful Deutsche mark, the more-than-helpful franc, the weighty but still valuable lira, that they do not get to know each other's good sides. But they are having a typically American sensitivity session. And that's why they call it the World Cup.

Then there is Borislav Mikhailov, the goalkeeper who was rather baldish only last season, and now sports a marvelous head of dark hair. Doesn't he worry about going askew when he dives into the surf to stop a cannonball? Anyway, Mikhailov was responding to my ghastly French, but at least he didn't wrinkle up his nose in distaste, which is what every true French patriot does to me when I give that beautiful language a try. Mikhailov's linguistic expertise is only natural, since he guards the portals for Mulhouse.

"Je n'avais pas peur, parce qu'il y avait 40 minutes encore," Mikhailov said. This is French for "What, me worry?" That's about how he felt when Germany scored in the 49th minute.

I N ALL the languages, including body language, the Bulgarians showed they didn't think this was such a big deal. This was Cleveland State or Richmond beating Indiana in March Madness of college basketball. These guys all come from the same schoolyards.

"I have known for several years that I am a star," Letchkov said nicely, in translation. "Now you all know."

Now the world will watch the Bulgarian wansarily an advantage, since the Italian players get used to letting skilled forwards from Brazil and Argentina and Germany and the Netherlands do the scoring for them. This far into the tournament, these guys all know each other. And that's why they call it the World Cup.

Is Luck Smiling on

Italians? By Alex Yannis

New York Times Service.
MARTINSVILLE, New Jersey — Everything was calm on the Italian front, following the triumph over Spain that put the three-time World Cup champi-on Azzurri in the semifinals of this World Cup of surprises. Coach Arrigo Sacchi, his dark charge over his held head.

dark glasses over his bald head, his maroon shirt unbuttoned, had a cordial meeting with the press at the Italians' training center at the Pingry School.

Sacchi had originally planned to go to the Bulgaria-Germany match later in the day, but he changed his mind. He worked with the team instead and watched Bulgaria's 2; 1 triumph on television. He must feel fortunate that the Germans are out and the Bulgarians will provide the opposition in the semifinals.

In fact, a number of observers in this World Cup feel that Italy has been the most formnate team, and Sacchi agreed -- up to a point. "We feel we were fortunate against Spain because we scored when they controlled the pace in the second half," Sacchi said Sunday morning, "but I don't think we were lucky against Nigeria because we controlled most of that game." Italy was two minutes away from climination against Nigeria last Tuesday when Roberto Bag-gio, who had not scored in the opening games, stepped up to save Italy, Sacchi and himself. Baggio tied the score at 1-1 against Nigeria with two minutes left and scored the winner on a penalty kick, 12 minutes into the overtime, for his first two goals in a tournament in ch he had been expected to shine brighter than most. Baggio followed up his heroics Saturday at Foxboro Stadium near Boston by scoring with two minutes left to give Italy a 2-1 triumph over Spain and sent the Italians to the semifinals.

"No, we're not satisfied to be in the semifinals," Sacchi said, We cannot be satisfied. We have a lot to prove to our prest dent and our people."

Sacchi had praise for all his players for the performance against Spain, particularly Alessandro Costacurta and Dino Baggio, who scored the first goal against Spain and also scored the only goal in the first-round triumph over Norway. Dino Baggio was also the man who scored the winner over Portugal on the last day of qualifying.

"People didn't believe in Dino Baggio," Sacchi said of the lanky midfielder. "Two or three months before the World Cup he was not up to par, but he is having a good tournament." Costacurta has been the steadiest influence in the middle of the Italian defense. Even though he lost his usual partner, Franco Baresi, to injury, he has been just as effective with Paolo Maldini in the last two games. Although there are some similarities between this Italian team and the one that captured the 1982 World Cup, Sacchi refused to compare them. "The 1982 team was a great team," Sacchi said. "Right now, this team wants to concentrate on playing the next game."

Italy and Roberto Baggio are putting up a good imitation of the '82 team, which relied on Paolo Rossi. They started slowly and have picked up momentum as they go along, Sacchi kept reminding his listeners of the high level of com-petition in this World Cup and the heat and humidity that has been the norm in most games.

Would-Be Salesman Buys His Team a Soccer Dream

By Christopher Clarey

PALO ALTO, California -Just before this sun-drenched lottery of a World Cup began, Thomas Ravelli was asked to assess his Swedish team's chances of success.

Ravelli scratched his increasingly prominent forehead and responded with quiet confidence: "It has been 20 years since Sweden has had as good a team as we have now," Four weeks later, Ravelli might want to revise that statenent. Thanks in large part to his timely performance in Sunday's victory over Romania, this Swedish team is not merely the best in 20 years; it is the best since 1958, when another cohesive band from the land of short summer nights made it all the way to the final before losing to Pele and Brazil.

"We have made a great tour-nament," Ravelli said, shortly after his team advanced to the secon World Cup semifinal in its hisfory. "Now we have two games to go to make it even

With deep wrinkles around his eyes and his receding blond hairline, Ravelli looks more like the salesman he studied to be side, he still had enough spring in his legs and competitive fire in his heart to become the hero of Sunday's penalty-kick shoohave thought about it more. But this game was too important." Ravelli has started plenty of important games for Sweden. After winning the national title with the Swedish club team Osters Vaxo in 1980 and 1981, he moved into the starting lineup on the national team, replacing Ronnic Hellstrom. When he arrived on the scene, Sweden was no longer a world power, and it failed to qualify for the World Cup finals in 1982 or 1986.

In 1990, when Ravelli finally got the chance to play in Italy, the Swedes lost all three of their first-round matches and returned to a disappointed nation.

"We won our last qualifying game, 6-0, against Finland, and everybody thought we would be so good." Ravelli said. "Maybe we trained a bit too hard last time. We practiced twice a day, and I think it was too much."

With a new coach, Tommy Svenson, in charge, Sweden quickly regrouped and managed to reach the semifinals of the European Championships in 1992. That success, like the World Cap success of 1958, came on Swedish soil

"This time, we are a long way from home." Ravelli said.

And even if Ravelli and the Swedes should fall short of the 1958 team by losing once more to Brazil, the man who could have been a salesman is not ready to write an end to his international career.

Brazil's Branco at 30: His Time Has Come, Again

By Malcolm Moran New York Times Service

DALLAS - His time had come and gone. That is the way it seemed for Branco, as the national team of Brazil pushed through this World Cup with the style of its offensive skills and the substance of its defensive play. Branco's time was four years ago in Italy, or four before that in Mexico.

He turned 30 in April, the fifth-oldest name on the mational team's roster. He was once considered one of his country's best defensive players, with a powerful leg in free-kick situations.

But as the Brazilians prepared to come to America, and the smallest detail of the national team became subject to debate, Branco's spot on the team became an issue.

Then, in the flash of a damaging elbow -- Leonardo's elbow to the face of the American Tab Ramos in the first game of the second round --Branco received a chance: He was starting against the Netherlands in the quarterfinai game on Saturday afternoon. He was lining up for a free kick late in the second half of a 2-2 game.

The loss of a two-goal lead, an unthinkable possibility to Brazil's followers, had created a shocking vulnerability. The clock in the Cotton Bowi was ticking above 35 minutes. Branco took the time to look, and to think that the time was right. "Before hitting the ball I looked up at the scoreboard," he said through an interpreter. There were 10 minutes to go.

A Brother Confronts a Legacy of Violence

By B. E. Stewart

Washington Post Servee

HICAGO — Mikal Gilmore has a soft voice, an understated wit and a sweet enthusiasm. He is lean and pale. His forehead arches high above his angular face, and he seems to listen thoughtfully. carefully. He is tactful when the media people, who interview him three or four times a day lately, ask fuzzy questions or think his book is a true-crime novel. When they goof, as Larry King and Charlie Rose did, and call his book "Shot in the Dark," he remains gracions.

He's on a book tour right now. But what makes his interviews unusual is the wrenching intimacy and dignity of what he has to say. His book is "Shot in the Heart." It is the tale of a family — his own—and a tale of impressive hravery, again, his own. The bravery is in investigating and writing unflinchingly and poetically of the "whole [expletive] tragedy" that is his heritone and blood that is his heritage and blood. "It took me 15 years to work up the nerve." says Gilmore. "The idea scared the hell out of me, putting myself out so publicly and in perhaps a permanent way. I was dannted. I didn't know if I could bear it."

Mikal Gilmore is Gary Gilmore's youngest brother. Gary Gilmore, on two consecutive nights in Provo, Utah, shot to death a motel keeper and a law student working at a gas station. It was not his crimes but his punishment that made him famous, Sentenced to death, Gary Gilmore refused to let his

Sentenced to death, Gary Gilmore refused to let his lawyers appeal. He was executed by Utah in 1977, in the first U.S. execution in 10 years.

Gary Gilmore's execution — five gunshots into a white circle pinned on his black T-shirt — and the preceding months of legal wrangling were big news.

Norman Mailer wrote about it in "The Execution er's Song" and won a Pulitzer Prize.

But Mikal Gilmore's book is not just about Gary. It is about all the members of the Gilmore family and their legacy of pain and waste and degradation. It is about cruelty and betrayal of children, and the grown-up children's subsequent rage and self-de-struction. It is about a violence as routine as mealtime. And it is about the one, Mikal, who survived to tell the tale.

Much of what Mikal Gilmore, 43, has to say is chilling. But he speaks easily and at length. He never expected his book to make such waves.

"It's a difficult book — dark," he says. "I was stunned at the reviews. I never expected them to be

Since 1976, Mikal Gilmore has been writing music criticism and thoughtful profiles for Rolling Stone. Isolated within his family, as a young boy he had turned to books and to music. "I took a great deal of solace and pleasure in life in reading," he says. And later in music. "Music has been my best friend."
Gilmore was used to investigating people's lives.

But it was quite another thing to investigate himself and his family, to write of his father beating his wifeand sons bloody, of his screaming mother smashing the turkey into the wall at Thanksgiving, of one brother being stabbed and eventually dying from the wounds and another murdering innocents.

For Mikal Gilmore, there is no bitterness.

He began his book three years ago. His longpostponed "Shot in the Heart" proposal was purchased in 1991 for a reported advance of $700,000, Doubleday beating out 10 competing publishers. He had lost his entire family long before. His father, mother and two of his hrothers had died, Gary from execution, Gaylen from the stabbing wounds that never healed. Frank Jr., the oldest brother, was alive, but had vanished.

To all appearances, he was a success. Besides his Rolling Stone stories, he was music critic at the nowdefunct Los Angeles Herald-Examiner. He had friends and money in the bank. He had been married. But, he says, "I had a period of infense despair." I thought I could never have my own family, children of my own. My life came to a halt. On a particularly dark night, I realized I was still held by my bonds with my family. I'd told myself I'd escaped, but I realized I had indeed come from my family. Devastation resonated in my bloodlines Frank Gilmore Sr, had a mother who conjured spirits, who shunted him off to boarding schools, who never spoke of her baby who had died. She claimed, and Frank believed, that his father was the magician Houdini and had abandoned them. When Bessie Brown, Mikal's mother and Frank's when Bessie Brown, Mikal's mother and Frank's seventh or eighth wife, met him, he was scanning merchants with phony advertising and hotfooting it out of town. Bessie was the rebellions daughter of a bullying father and a descendant of Mormons who had walked across the country. Her childhood was harsh, filled with tales of sin and retribution, and she find the formly form as soon as the could. fled the family farm as soon as she could.

Frank beat Mikal's three brothers viciously, at least weekly, because they dropped a piece of cake or lingered five minutes after school, or for nothing. He mocked and humiliated them. Frank Jr., the oldest, withdrew. Gary would scream and thrash, which made his father hit longer and harder. He remained the anointed troublemaker until he died.

Until Mikal was born, Gaylen was the brother most loved by his father. After Mikal's birth, Gay-len, too, was beaten and mocked.

"I told myself I was different from them," Mikal Gilmore says of his family. And he was. By the time he was born, 10 years after Gary, his father had done a turnabout, buying a house in Portland and publishing a local building codes handbook. And he was gentle with his youngest son. His father would take Mikal away on business trips for weeks on end. "My father and I," he writes, "were our own family." But this separated Mikal from the rest of his family. "My brothers were people I wanted to be close to, that I loved," he says: "I longed for fraternity with them." He was able to achieve it, in the end, only with Frank Ir. "This book brought me to the last place I thought it would," he says. "I found my real family — Frank."

"Shot in the Heart" is too houest a book to have a happy ending. "In the beginning." Mikal says, "it was plain that you learn things so you don't have to keep repeating them. At the end I realized you don't get to a place where you're purged. The last paragraph was grim. But when I got down to the last sentences I was more clased than I've ever been in my life." In writing about his family he says he has found some peace and, yes, some happiness.

"I think a victorious life would be, at the end you are free of bitterness. I approached this book with detachment. I had no stake in vindicating or judging. I think bitterness doesn't have a place in my heart. I feel lighter now. I feel less argency: I don't know if I would want to be anyone else. It would not be as interesting. It would be boring.

"It's a heartbreaking and devastating world," he says. "All you can do is live with as much grace as
